SOFT NERVES

(For Emily Dickinson)

The ice—a sight eye reflecting prisms,

this haunts you because you know one day you died and never remembered,

The sun unbelievably sweeping strength sky, your violence looking

(not to be confused with hate) in a subtle world

we miss all truth,

(now this is not the last time around) and you know it!

(now this is still not understood)

yet . . .

The frost tinting twilight, is designed by one artist

I walked athletically through white inferno,

I'm in love with warmth of snow red faced dancing to a vision.

(now in New York the bells are stirring your emotions)

You realize nothing is born in sameness

And continue to glorify the muse.

Each house is mysticism

because you could not stop (for this was in a dream)

You had to find the stop

You continued. You left me there.

As if no soul, the silence blew wild

It went so quick you wondered what language this was,

(like Busia in another body or Aeolus, king of winds)

The lake shores breath is motionless.

The earth is moving

Birds are dripping in sun

(now you are not tripping) rather going home to close

The silence, you need'nt understand the trains movement or war.

none see, or remember you when you knew me-Emily.

Rose Lesniak

the people pass and scatter this moving dissolves everything except above—
I am nude seeing life in its firstbirth accepting death I live fully

EDITOR'S NOTE

Typically the photographic essay of a university yearbook is an organization of photographs of that school with a cute poem written around those pictures. The preceding seventeen pages have been about Northeastern, not of the buildings, but just a touch of the talent contained within the student body.

I'd like to thank Rose, Barb, Tim, and Darlene for their cooperation.

This year the club sponsored a group of special scouts on a camping trip and donated $500 to the '76 Special Olympics as a result of a fund-raising Winter Carnival. Plans are now being made for the opening of a school resource room, containing materials and information from publishers for Special Education Majors.
